Eating Stories and Telling Food

Are you seeking tools that help kids develop their awareness of the Earth and their relationships with all living things? Food is an entry point to understanding our interdependence with the natural world and raises issues of social and climate justice. The Earth to Tables Legacies book and website (earthtotables.org) offer teachers real life stories through 10 videos and 11 photo essays on topics like healthy soil, human-animal relations, Indigenous world views, food sovereignty, collective cooking, and eating together. Learn from an exchange of experiences between youth and elders, Indigenous and settlers, rural and urban, Canadian and Mexican.

In this online workshop, we will introduce videos and photo essays as catalysts for storytelling and activities for use in elementary school classrooms. Teacher,Äôs guides include questions, hands-on activities, intergenerational and intercultural dialogue, suggested individual and collective actions, as well as further online resources.
